AS STRONG AS THE LEGEND WHO BUILT IT.

Fort JadhavGadh reflects the stature of Pilaji Jadhavrao – the Maratha General in the army of Chhatrapati Shahuji – a man as strong in mind and body as the stone structure he envisioned to create.

In 1707, Chhatrapati Shahuji, the grandson of the great Chhatrapati Shivaji was released after 21 years of imprisonment by the Mughal ruler Shahjahan. He handpicked a group of fiercely loyal men to restore Maratha glory, recapture the region from the Mughals and safeguard it from other adversaries. Pilaji Jadhavrao was one of the chosen few. He quickly gathered and trained able men across Jadhavgadhi and Saswad region to fight for the victory of Marathas. This braveheart breathed his last in 1784, after serving the Marathas and three generations of Peshwas.

Built in 1710, Fort JadhavGadh was a place of residence and a safe haven. Since it was built for practical purposes, it is devoid of intricate designs and carvings like other Maratha fortresses. Yet it is steeped in Maratha architecture. Woodwork and armoured main Durwaaza. Rock stairways and main residential quarters. And of course the dungeons which served as grain storerooms, and in tumultuous times, prisons. Four such enigmatic dungeons have been traced and restored. One of them may even have a secret route to be used in times of crisis.

Behold the magnificence of this 300 year-old heritage monument carefully restored and preserved by the Kamat Group.
