Dharamshala, Himachal Pradesh

An amalgamation of Rajput valour, colonial glory, and elusive Tibetan enigma, Dharamshala is testimony to combined cultural history of the hills of Himachal. This is why this often visited destination offers you a new surprise every time you are here. And the best bit is that it has a number of secluded and comfortable places for women travellers to unwind in. Just a stone's throw from the base of the Triund trek is Adivaha, a rich amalgamation of Mughal, colonial and the present Tibetan history. The boutique resort is a brick and mortar representation of the narrative that is etched across the snow-capped granite peaks of the Dhauladhar. The sky is the most unique shade of blue, and against the expansive and glorious, snowy Dhauladhar mountain range, Adivaha is a quiet spot in the middle of tea estates and numerous cherry blossom trees. However its biggest draw is not outside, but within the estate. For Adivaha is a heritage building that is about three hundred years old, that has been recently restored and remodelled to serve every traveller in search of peace and tranquillity. Designed for both business and leisure travel, Adivaha is ideally situated in Jawahar Nagar, one of the region's most popular locales. From here, you can make the most of all that Dharamshala has to offer. With its convenient location, the property offers easy access to the city's must-see destinations.
